

The Daily Gazetteer.

SATURDAY, APRIL 9. 1737.

410 558.

Yesterday arriv'd a Mail from Holland.

HEY write from PETERSBURGH, That tho' 'twas said the Czarina's Plenipotentiaries were not to set out for the Congress at Soroka in Moldavia, till she had heard the Turks had accepted the Preliminaries proposed by the Court of Vienna, yet the said Plenipotentiaries have now receiv'd Orders to hasten their Departure and their Equipages, which will be very magnificent; the Court being desirous that their Appearance there be splendid. Nevertheless, 'tis supposed that the Congress there can scarce be open'd these two Months; because it will take up near that Time, before the Russian Plenipotentiaries can be there.

The precipitant Retreat of the Tartars from the Muscovite Frontiers is confirm'd, with these Circumstances, viz. That Major-General Rading pursued them with 300 Dragoons as far as the Dnieper, and re-took the rest of the Booty which they carry'd off; and that the Tartars, though above 100000 in Number, did not venture to attack the smallest Post, though some had not above ten Men to defend them.

Letters from VIENNA say, The Emperor has declar'd the Duke of Lorraine Generalissimo of his Army in Hungary. They say that a Courier is coming hither from Sir Everard Faulkner, our Ambassador at the Porte, with a new Declaration; wherein the Grand Seigneur prefers a War, rather than he will consent to give up Asoph. A certain Foreign Minister at Constantinople writes a Letter on this Subject, wherein he expresses himself in these Terms: All the Business here is Preparations for War. There is no other Way of satisfying the Common People, who complain that Hostilities are delay'd too long: And at Constantinople the Negotiations for a Peace are scarce ever mention'd. Every Thing of this Kind is treated of in the Grand Vizier's Camp at Babadaghi. By such Conduct it looks as if there was a Design to prepare a Victim beforehand for the Resentment of the People, in Case of the Misfortune of any Measures that may be taken. This Prime Minister, whose Instructions are very extensive, is fully sensible of the Dilemma into which he is plung'd: For if he concludes a Peace by the Surrender of Asoph, he runs the Hazard of being strangled; and he is in Danger of the same Fate, if he should advise the Turks to a War, and that War should prove unsuccessful.

The last Letter which the Count de Konigsfegg, President of the Council of War, wrote to the Grand Vizier, is comprised in the following Clauses.

The Count begins with a Declaration, 'How much he is concerned to hear by the Grand Vizier's last Letter, and by the Relations of the Emperor's Ambassador at the Porte, that the said Power is not willing to send their Ministers vested with full Instructions, to the Place nominated for treating of a Peace, unless it is assured before hand of the Restitution of Asoph.' Whereupon the Count makes these Remarks.

'A Preliminary of this Nature is too exceptionable for any one ever to expect that the Court of Russia will receive it, or that the Emperor will give himself any Trouble to procure their Acceptance of it.'

'As to the Allegation, that 'tis incompatible with the Honour and Security of the Porte to renounce Asoph, it may be answer'd, that the Crown of Russia has been a long time in Possession of Asoph, and neither the Dignity nor Safety of the Ottoman Empire has received the least Prejudice from it.'

'The Porte, however disposed it may be at present, has agreed to the Justice of the Complaints of Russia, since by its own Acknowledgment, that Power had Reason to complain of the frequent Incursions made into the Provinces under its Dominion, and of the carrying away of such Numbers of its Subjects into Slavery.'

'If it should so happen, that the Time should expire before a Peace be concluded, and that Negotiations should be forc'd to give Place to a War, the Emperor will be by no Means to blame, because his Imperial Majesty can with great Honour acquit himself, that he has done every thing in his Power to bring Matters to that pacifick Issue which he all along aim'd at.

'If the present Opportunity be not embrac'd for bringing the Peace to a Conclusion, 'tis very much to be feared, that any Good Offices for this Purpose will hereafter be more difficult, if not impracticable.'

'The Emperor can safely say, that he has acted towards the Porte with all that Sincerity and Affection which might be expected from a good Neighbour and Friend, both to the Porte and to Peace. He has establish'd Equity and Justice for the Principles of his Conduct in this Respect, and for the Rule of every Step that he has taken. Therefore it would be a Deviation from those very Principles, if his Imperial Majesty, after having perform'd the Duties of a Neighbour and a Friend to the Porte, should not discharge those of an Ally to Russia with the same Punctuality, and with the most inviolable Fidelity.'

'The Count de Konigsfegg concludes his Letter with a Remark, 'That he has formerly pointed out to the Grand Vizier the Measures that may yet be taken with Success, for re-establishing a Peace; that therefore he thinks it to no Purpose to repeat them; and that he has nothing more to do than to declare to the Grand Vizier, that the most welcome News the Emperor can receive from the Porte will be, that they are pleas'd to have a Regard to the Representations and Exhortations of his Imperial Majesty.'

'Tis expected that the Grand Vizier's Answer to this Letter will decide Peace or War for this Year. Mean time the Imperial Court has received an Express from the Count d'Ostien, their Minister at Petersburg, with Advice that the Russian Court, in order to give a fresh Proof of their equitable Intentions, have consented to grant the Porte six Weeks longer, in order to determine whether they will accept of the last Conditions proposed for an Accommodation. A Courier has been dispatch'd from Vienna to the Grand Vizier, to give him Notice of this Term allow'd by the Court of Russia.'

The Emperor's Army is to be commanded by the Velt Marshal Count de Palfy, under the Duke of Lorain; Count Seckendorf is to have the Command of the Foot, and the Command of the Horse is to be given to the Count de Khevenhuller, Vice President of the Council of War. Prince Charles of Lorain will also make the Campaign in Hungary, at the Head of his own Regiment. The Emperor's General the Baron de Schmettau, is so dangerously ill at Presbourg, that his Life is despair'd of. If he dies, the Emperor will lose one of the best General Officers he has left, and one of the ablest Engineers in his Service. The Dutch Ambassador's Chaplain is set out from Vienna, at the General's own Request, to comfort him in the Hour of Death.

They write from Dresden, that the King of Poland has dispatch'd his Orders for 8000 Saxons (among whom will be the Prince of Gotha's Regiment of Horse) to be ready for their March to serve in Hungary, and 'tis thought they will set out accordingly the Beginning of May.

And from Brunswick, that the Duke of Wolfenbuttle has engaged to furnish the Emperor with four Regiments, in case he be obliged to declare War against the Turks.

They add from the former, that the late Duke of Wirtemberg has, by his Will, made the King of Poland his Executor; and from the latter, that great Preparations are making at Gottingen for celebrating the Inauguration of that University, and that they are coining fine Medals both of Gold and Silver at Hartz, where his Majesty's Silver Mines are, in order to be distributed on that Occasion.

The Letters from Vienna, mention the Answer given to the Spanish Ambassador the Count de Fuencalra, when he made the formal Demand of the 2d Archduchess in Marriage for the King Don Carlos, viz. That the present State of Affairs at the Imperial Court, did not yet permit them to treat of that Match; but that nevertheless it should be taken into Consideration. This Answer has been sent express by his Excellency to his Court.

'Tis said the Matters in Dispute betwixt the Imperial and Bavarian Courts, are in a very fair Way of being accommodated, and that the Elector has given his Orders for 16 Bavarian Regiments, Foot and Horse, to make ready for a March, which 'tis believed will be directly to Hungary, as soon as ever the Accommodation is finished.

There's Advice from Chamberry, That on the 21st ult. O. S. the King of Sardinia consummated his Marriage there with the Princess of Lorrain; upon which Occasion there were great Rejoicings; and that they set out in a few Days after for Turin.

Letters from the Ukraine say, That in that very Rencontre wherein the Scots General Lesley was kill'd by the Tartars, his Son, who was a Lieutenant-Colonel, had the Misfortune to be taken Prisoner.

They write from Madrid, That the Spanish and Portuguese Courts agreed to execute the Articles of Agreement on both Sides, at one and the same time; that, consequently, the Domesticks of the Ministers of the two Courts were to be released on the 20th ult. O. S. at Madrid and Lisbon: That the Kings of Spain and Portugal should likewise name, upon one and the same Day, the Ministers they are to send to one another: And 'tis said too, That such a Regulation was to be made, that the said Ministers should arrive at Madrid and Lisbon upon one and the same Day. — The Convention for this Accommodation being sign'd on the 12th ult. O. S. Mr. Keene, the British Minister at Madrid, sent a Courier next Day to Lisbon, with Orders to Admiral Norris, to return with his Squadron, as soon as possible, to England, and on the same Day gave Notice of it to Quadra, the Spanish Secretary of State, who thereupon told him, That the King would be the better pleas'd to hear of the Departure of the said Squadron, because he would then be at full Liberty to determine the Disputes subsisting with the Crown of England in an Amicable Manner.
